Description :

PDF-938d1 | For many years after its foundation in 1791, the Ordnance Survey was mainly concerned with making small-scale military maps of England. The department had no definite plans for Ireland until 1824, when it was directed to map the whole country (as a prelude to a nationwide valuation of land and buildings) as quickly as possible on the large scale of six inches to the mile. After many delays and som... A Paper Landscape: The Ordnance Survey in Nineteenth-Century Ireland [Second Edition] (Four Courts History Classics)
